

Conclusions

This "Community handbook for research infrastructure communications" is the first collection of such information in the ENVRI community. It does try to provide ideas and results of COOP+ experiments with these methods, but is not considered to be a fully descriptive analysis of all potential communication and dissemination efforts. However, due to interviews with the ENVRI community (which includes the COOP+ community) communication officers, it can be considered to be the starting point of community knowledge base on the subject.

It is important to note that the published version of this document was a COOP+ project deliverable and just the starting point of a living document. The content can be further distributed and edited after the COOP+ project.